COMMENT ON SPORTING ACTION.

The stop and slobber of sporting comment in these days of ours abounds, so to say. From New York comes the news, under date of Dec. 25, that the remaining days of 1896 are few. So! Six filled the count. There were six at the same time last year and there will be six next, unless something unusual happens to the calendar. As Touchstone said, according to Duke Jaques:

 "It's ten o'clock:

Thus may we see, quoth he, how the world wags:

Tis but an hour ago, since it was nine;

And after an hour more, 'twill be eleven;"

There's another literary figure—Cap'n Jack Bunsby—Cuttle's Seafarer—who reflects wordy nothingness of comment. Shakespeare was "kidding" the "flubdubber" of his age, through Touchstone and Duke Jaques. Dickens took a hack at the same pretender, through Jack Bunsby. There's enough literary mutual-admiration for a modern cross and an 1896 Calvary. Both are needed. Bunsby's "bearing on the observation" reaches the application of this. The spade of present sporting comment isn't anything like a long implement to garner dirt. It is rather a sort of cloak to cover the mire of events, according to the inclination of the commentator toward the actor.

Going further into the realms of criticism of present sporting doings, the information is vouchsafed that Corbett needs to be in "fettle" to punch the "stuffin," out of that Cornish-New Zealand marvel in the fighting line; Robert Fitzsimmons, the red and redolent. So, again! When wasn't Corbett in "fettle."

The word "fettle" is English. It means condition and is peculiar to British mankind and equinity. Answering the question, Corbett was "short" but once in his career. That was when he let Sharkey "mix it" with and "navy" him at Frisco and got "a draw." That decision was, perhaps, as corrupt as Earp's. Corbett made light of his man and suffered the consequences of physical imperfection.

Champions who are careless deserve to suffer.

That was the only time Corbett was ever physically imperfect. It should furnish a deep lesson to him.

Jackson stood Corbett off. But Jackson was a champion, too. Had he been more careful of Jackson and less subject to the ecstasy of success, he might have been more than he was. Corbett's high class: far higher than the public's notion of the average of a pugilist. We all have notions and faults. Humanity's best is the man or woman of control and the fewest weaknesses. Corbett hasn't failed but once in his fighting career. He has "smothered" a lot of champions in a sauntering sort of way. So has "Red" Robert Fitzsimmons. There has though, been more friction to the Cornishman's action. Both men have made their matches well. That's mental balance. The fellow who doesn't pick his fights, for winning ways, isn't "ripe o'the head." Corbett has gone against keener corners than Fitzsimmons. Fitz once barred Sullivan in his challenges. Corbett went at and smothered the terror. He could have smothered him on the mere intelligence of physical and pugilistic conditions, and hitting a man at the right time, when Sullivan was at his best. Mitchell, the "cocky," a good fighter of his own class, was similarly treated by Corbett. Yet Mitchell stood off Sullivan by the natural conditions of mentality and the luck of weather. Class in pugilism is sharper than horse class, as mankind is sharper than the highest type of animal.

The courts and technicality of legalism notwithstanding—Fitzsimmons was cheated in California. He smothered Sharkey. So did Corbett—early. Later, condition told. Sharkey's a tool. Denny Lynch—his Svengali—is the toad in the Sharkey hole. Lynch played for a big stake—with the saw or chisel he picked out—and got it. Lynch is a Yankee and a keen hand. He has always been in the "sure thing" class—from base ball, to the turf and pugilism. Each department has "produced" to Lynch. The base ball folks have Lynch "tabbed," he is ruled off the turf and is at present not in good standing as a pugilistic manipulator. A glance over the early plan of the action out of which came the Fitzsimmons-Sharkey match shows how keenly it was arranged. The bookmakers and big bettor of the East was the "game" in view. Lynch landed his fish—early.

Fitzsimmons and Corbett are matched. Their fight is ten weeks ahead. Fitzsimmons lost to Sharkey, yet knocked him out. Corbett and Sharkey fought a draw. Superficial fighting figures—pugilistic form—say that Fitzsimmons should win. Here and there, in action, such figures can be rejected. This form line—a pair of fights—can be thrown out in this case. The odds on Sharkey and Fitzsimmons—3 to 1 on Fitz—were natural. The odds on Corbett against the Cornishman should be from 7 to 5 to 8 to 5. Fitzsimmons will not have any reach advantage to speak of over Corbett and Corbett will have some 25 pounds to the good in weight. That's a lot. The old English adage about pugilism "a good big 'un's better than a good little 'un," applies most keenly. But the fight's result should be settled on mental lines. If it isn't, its outcome will be false. A man who uses his wits will smother a man who doesn't use them, nine times out of ten. It's right that he should. Physical power is reflected by the hodman and the roadmaker. Mental power comes to us through the doctor, lawyer and successful manager in general avenues. Maher—a physical wonder, but a mental "spinning wheel"—was "pie" for Fitz—twice. Yet in their New Orleans meeting, had the Irishman possessed mental balance he might have won. In two or three of his fights Fitzsimmons has shown wild mental streaks. Corbett has never shown a lack of brains.

Corbett will not fight "Red Bob" in "Red Bob's style. Most of Fitzsimmons' opponents have made the pace. Corbett isn't a pace maker. He's a fighting mathematician. Turf handicap figures applied to the two men yield this kind of an estimate:

Corbett.....	.850
Fitzsimmons.....	.580

At the same time Fitzsimmons is the hardest nut ever offered for Corbett to crack.

Maher's a physical champion. But he will not "do" above the neck. O'Donnell's do not count. The Australian's a mild mannered bluff, when the tigerish action of present pugilism is considered. Past action be blowed, damned, or filed away. The present's surely most full of movement. If it isn't, life's a "ringer" and the progress of experience a liar. Bets on the latter should be good at about 1 to 250,000. Weights and bodies reasonably even, calculation on fighters should go to brains. They are the balance of humanity, all about. They reach into horse and dog lines, too. There's more honesty about horses and dogs also. Brains sometimes reflect physical power in men—and always in animals. The latter cannot talk and have no commercial nook. One cannot vouch for all their owners, though.
